A: You are downloading crack which contain a code. You are not downloading the crack. , the Court will first look to see if there is a genuine issue of material fact regarding the requirement that the conditions were "normal." Plaintiff argues that the bar's steep stairs were "normal" because they were used every day and because the debris on the stairs was "always present in the bar." However, the uncontroverted evidence is that the staircase was not used every day, and there is no evidence that the debris on the stairs was always present. In fact, plaintiff's allegations are that the debris was "constant," but plaintiff admits that he was unaware of the exact amount of debris on the stairs at any given time. Further, the mere fact that the stairs were used every day does not establish that they were normal in terms of physical structure. It is true that the condition of the stairs was not reported to anybody. But this fact is irrelevant because plaintiff failed to put forth any evidence that the condition was not the result of some negligent act. In fact, the evidence is that plaintiff was present at the bar on several occasions when the condition existed and did not report it. Plaintiff was on the premises approximately fifty times during the four years he worked at the bar. Therefore, any failure to report the conditions is relevant to the degree of care owed, but not the existence of the condition itself. There is no evidence that any customer of defendant complained of the condition. The Court's next inquiry is whether plaintiff has a genuine issue of material fact regarding the required condition of the area of "unsafe and hazardous working conditions." This means that there must be evidence of the condition of the stairs at the time of the accident and that the defendant failed to correct the condition. Plaintiff argues that the area of unsafe working conditions was the entire stairway and that the defendant failed to correct it. Plaintiff does not indicate what corrective action defendant was required to take, but plaintiff does state that the bar "had the duty to take corrective action." Plaintiff's argument misses the mark. A claim that defendant breached its duty by failing to take "corrective action" is a claim that defendant violated a duty that he owed
